Jane Johnson Ceramics Exhibition

Jane Johnson creates beautiful textured jugs and watering cans, with an aged, worn look that is tactile and recognizable. Made from slabs of hand rolled clay and textured with familiar patterns, it is sometimes unclear what material these objects are made from. Jane likes to play with form, function and textures linking a garden element with her spouted watering cans that are made to display flowers and her jugs that vary in size from the petite to the capacious designed for the same purpose. This selling exhibition offers a rare opportunity to view and purchase fine quality, contemporary ceramics.

18 January – 11 March 2012

Springworks

The Oxford Printmakers is a long established workshop set up in 1976 when a group of artists, many from the Ruskin School of Drawing, wanted to continue their work at a time when there were few print workshops in the UK and none within the Oxford area. This is a wonderful opportunity to see work by a large number of new and prominent printmakers (there are some 80 members), and to appreciate the vast array of printing techniques in use, varying from vibrant innovative styles to more traditional methods developed since the 16th century: collagraphy, etching, monoprinting, chine colle, drypoint, screenprinting, woodcut, ino-cut, wood engraving and stone lithography. There will be a display of tools and equipment used as well as a video showing the artists at work

Modelling the Monastery Exhibition

Subject to a successful funding bid, young people will take over the exhibition space and stage their own exhibition about life in the Middle Ages. Using traditional craft skills from the period and conducting their own research through investigating the Abbey finds from Corinium Museum collections, this exhibition will provide a different insight into the medieval world through the eyes of young people from across the Cotswold District.

17 March – 29 April 2012

Sensational Clay

A sensory treat for all the family to enjoy. From tiny, handheld items to huge musical pots all the objects can be touched and explored to find out more about the materials used to make them. Delve into sand pits to discover hidden treasures, explore the tactile, textured wall panels, and play the musical pots. Visitors can learn more about the maker Jon Williams through the DVD playing in the exhibition. Almost everything Jon makes is produced on his potters wheel and this DVD gives a real insight into how uses this to make his amazing creations.
